Being a homebody isn't an option at these nature-friendly residential communities

June is Great Outdoors Month—no, really, it's an official U.S. Senate designation—but instead of just taking a one-time adventure trip, why not find a place where you can experience the great outdoors again and again?

Georgia's Reynolds Lake Oconee is built around what the development calls a "19,000-acre freshwater playground," which is a pretty apt way of looking at this residential community. You can join the Lake Oconee Anglers Club, go stand-up paddleboarding at dawn, try your luck at wakeboarding, and much more. Obviously a lakefront property is the way to go, and one option is 1070 South Grove Road, a five-bedroom home with its own dock built in 2020. It's listed for $3.495 million on reynoldslakeoconee.com.

At Tributary in Driggs, Idaho, meanwhile, your neighbors are Grand Teton and Yellowstone National Parks. Even closer to home you have mountain biking, hiking, skiing, trout fishing—basically any outdoor activity you can imagine. The five-bedroom, 5.5-bath Basecamp cabin is available for $4.95 million at tributaryidaho.com.

South Carolina's The Cliffs at Keowee Springs is another adventurer's paradise. The gorgeous five-bedroom home at 222 Creek Stone Court ($4.495 million, cliffsliving.com) overlooks Lake Keowee and is also near Devils Fork and Table Rock State Parks. The Cliffs Exploration Series organizes monthly hikes for residents, and there's also a new Sportsman Trail with 12 stations where you can test your weapons skills—everything from archery and ax throwing to air rifles and slingshots. (Hey, as long as it gets you outside...) The property even has special dog showers for your furry friends.

THE LISTING

El Mangroove Residences, Autograph Collection by Marriott

This dreamy two-story, four-bedroom, eco-conscious villa (one of 13 on the property) is located within the Blue Zone of Costa Rica's Nicoya Peninsula, which basically guarantees owners a better (and longer!) life. The residences are fully managed by the hotel's staff, and they can be rented out easily when you're stuck back at your real home. Ownership also comes with a Pura Vida Pass, which provides access to hotel amenities, discounts on rooms and spa treatments, airport shuttle service, and more. El Mangroove, Guanacaste, Costa Rica; 4,106 square feet, four bedrooms, four bathrooms; from $1.95 million, elmangrooveresidences.com

THE UPGRADE

Yeti SB120 Trail Bike

Ready to explore the great outdoors on two wheels? Yeti has been making high-end bikes since 1985, and the new SB120 may just be the best trail bike out there right now. With its updated geometry, Yeti's patented Switch Infinity suspension linkage, and a reshaped frame, this high-tech masterpiece is equally adept at handling mellow trails and gnarly mountainous passes. Build kits from $6,300, backcountry.com
